

Mo and Dani met on Craigslist. They're an unlikely duo—with markedly different musical backgrounds—but their collaboration has flourished in a remarkably short time, garnering them over 20,000 YouTube fans in their first two years.

Both of them honed their musical skills in secret, walking into the spotlight for the first time together. The vibrant, active fanbase that grew out of Boom Gallows' first forays into digital distribution has sustained the duo as they continue play the music they're passionate about. Their original work has been praised by listeners and featured on indiefeedback.com and independent music channel Funspear Music. Through their secondary projects, Boom Gallows has donated a track to a kickstarter campaign for mental health resources, surpassed one million YouTube views, been praised by composers of songs they have covered, and been featured on websites including Nintendo.com. Skilled instrumentalists, Boom Gallows also displays notable ease with lyrics, speaking through precise narrative to address shared human experiences of connection, isolation, hope and loss.
